Cornell Law School

Concentration Option
2017-18

The third year of law study furnishes the opportunity to diversify through pursuit of individual interests. A wide range of elective courses including many seminars and problem courses holds out that prospect. The third year also permits concentration through in-depth study of a single field. To encourage this use of the third year, the School will offer students the opportunity to concentrate in any of four areas:

1) Advocacy
2) Business Law and Regulation
3) General Practice
4) Public Law

Each of the concentration programs requires the completion before graduation of 14 credit hours including a writing course in the designated area. A semester externship may be counted toward 4 hours of a concentration, on the recommendation of the faculty member supervising the externship and on the approval of the associate dean for academic affairs. The application for concentration credit must be made no later than the time at which the faculty member confirms to the associate dean that the externship has been satisfactorily completed. Appropriate courses taken in other units of the University or other law schools may be counted toward concentration recognition on the approval of the associate dean for academic affairs. Topics in Intellectual Property

The School will grant a certificate. A student may receive recognition for only one concentration.

A Concentration Declaration (Class of 2018) will be issued after graduation.

Courses qualifying for concentration areas for both 2016-17 and 2017-18 follow.
